Apprenticeship as a system of training, has had a long and dignified tradition in Canada and around the world. Trades have stood the test of time, evolving to meet an ever changing environment.

The work of apprentices and tradespeople is visible throughout the community. Skilled workers help us to enjoy a high standard of living. For example, they build and maintain our homes and communities; they keep our cars in proper running order, and they ensure that going out to eat is a pleasing and delectable experience!

Apprenticeship is a unique and recognized system of training. The system we use in Saskatchewan today, a combination of on-the-job training reinforced with periods of technical theoretical training, was initiated in 1944. At that time 13 trades were designated. Today, there are 49 designated trades in the province.

Historically, the skilled trades have been viewed as physically demanding and labour intensive. With the advances in technology and global marketing systems, the trades today are very involved with computerized systems, robotics, and meeting the demands of a just-in-time society.

The technological changes have increased workplace efficiency and raised consumer expectations. To address the challenges brought about by this evolution in the market place, the apprenticeship system has: designated new trades and sub-trades; reviewed and maintained relevant curricula; developed innovative and flexible training delivery; and broadened its partnerships in training and certification, provincially and nationally.

Apprenticeship and skilled trades training contribute to the development of a skilled labour force. Building that skilled labour force requires the commitment of industry, both business and labour, education and training institutions, governments, and labour market partners. As the demographics of Saskatchewan's population changes, the apprenticeship program will also evolve to meet the needs of the changing labour force.

VISION STATEMENT

65 BILLS PASSED IN HOUSE SESSION

Clippings Hansard Vol. 49
March 31, 1944

Six bills given first reading by the Saskatchewan legislative assembly Wednesday brought the total number of bills introduced at the present session up to 100. Of that total 65 have been given third reading and passed.

The house spent practically the entire Wednesday afternoon sitting in committee of the whole considering proposed new legislative amendments. It gave third reading to nine bills. Amendments introduced in the committee to four other bills were given first and third reading.

Outstanding among the acts passed during the afternoon were the Apprenticeship act, an act to amend the Child Welfare act, an Agents act and an act to amend the Saskatchewan Marriage act.

The Apprenticeship act makes possible an apprenticeship system for Saskatchewan. Under the provisions of that act the province in co-operation with the Dominion government can provide apprenticeship training in vocational schools and with employers in 13 designated trades.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE DESIGNATED TRADES IN SASKATCHEWAN

A Brief History of Apprenticeship in Saskatchewan

Apprenticeship has been in existence in various forms throughout the world for hundreds of years. The formal system of apprenticeship training that is used in Canada today was legislated by the federal government in 1944.

At the end of the Second World War, the federal government established the concept of apprenticeship training in Canada to provide skill training to workers by initiating the Rehabilitation program that covered the cost of training WWII veterans. Until that time, federal involvement in training was limited to providing funding to the provinces for education that met social or economic and employment needs. Immigration was the source for skilled workers.

In 1942, the Vocational Training Coordination Act provided opportunity for federal and provincial governments to cooperate in vocational training initiatives. The Apprenticeship Training Agreement in 1944 saw the federal government sharing the costs of training programs for registered apprentices with the provinces. Each province was required to have a director and young people were to enrol in courses that augmented their practical experience in the trades.

As a result of the Apprenticeship Training Agreement, the Government of Saskatchewan passed the Apprenticeship Act on April 1, 1944. The Act designated thirteen trades for apprenticeship training. The Apprenticeship Branch was formed on April 14, 1945 under the Saskatchewan Department of Labour.

On February 1, 1951, the Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act (1950) was revised to increase the number of tradespeople in Saskatchewan; provide residents with higher standards of workmanship; and protect tradespeople from unfair competition. The Provincial Apprenticeship Board (PAB) was established pursuant to the new Act. The PAB reviewed the progress of the branch, and advised in general terms as to future activities in apprenticeship training. Trade Advisory and Examining Boards, with equivalent numbers of employer and employee representatives, were also established and given the authority to make regulations for their respective trades.

On April 1, 1983, Saskatchewan's Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Program was transferred from the Department of Labour to the Department of Advanced Education and Manpower. Through consultation with industry, the Provincial Apprenticeship Board and the Trade Advisory Boards, amendments were made to The Act and regulations to improve the apprenticeship and trade certification program in Saskatchewan. Amendments included changes in eligibility for apprenticeship, verification of trade experience, appeal processes, and a provision for updating courses. The Apprenticeship and Trade Certification Act and regulations came into effect on September 2, 1986.

The decision in 1996 by the federal government to withdraw all funding from apprenticeship training by June 30, 1999 led industry to take action to develop recommendations to government for the renewal of the apprenticeship system in Saskatchewan. The PAB, with the support of the Minister, embarked on a renewal process. Following extensive consultations during 1996 and 1997, the PAB identified an industry-led model as the preferred option for the future of the apprenticeship system.

Representatives of all Trade Advisory Boards unanimously endorsed the PAB's recommendation in June 1997. The Chair of PAB formally communicated industry's recommendation for the future structure of apprenticeship to the Minister of Post-Secondary Education and Skills Training in June 1997. Cabinet approved the establishment of a new Apprenticeship Commission in May 1998.

In May 1999, the new Apprenticeship and Trade Certification Act 1999 was passed. It created an industry-led apprenticeship system that is more responsive to the needs of employers and employees. Industry and government share the authority for managing the commission. It puts resources and operational decision-making in the Commission that is governed by a board with a majority of industry (business and labour) representation.

This includes responsibility for the day-to-day operations of the apprenticeship system. The new Act provides authority to the Commission to make regulations respecting operational matters while maintaining authority through Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations for strategic policy matters. This approach, within a comprehensive accountability framework, results in an increased industry commitment to training and certification.

Commission Board Role and Responsibilities

Saskatchewan's Apprenticeship and Trade Certification Act 1999 establishes the Commission as an Agent of the Crown reporting to the Minister of Saskatchewan Learning, with an industry-led board. The Commission Board also has representation from trainers, under-represented groups and government.

The Apprenticeship and Trade Certification Act 1999 authorizes the Commission to manage the Apprenticeship and Trade Certification system.

The Commission:

- designates trades for apprenticeship training and certification;
- generates, retains and expends revenues;
- registers apprentices and journey-people, monitoring their training and providing certification of skill levels achieved;
- determines and charges fees for products and services;
- enters into agreements for training delivery; and
- represents Saskatchewan on interprovincial initiatives.

The Act gives the Commission the authority to make regulations to ensure the efficient and effective operation of the apprenticeship system to meet the needs of industry in a timely manner.

The Act also ensures accountability to both industry and government.

Journeyman certification in Saskatchewan requires individuals to have a broad and in-depth range of work experience and to have successfully passed an examination. Criteria for the work experience and the development of examinations are based on standards developed and validated by industry.

Between 1945 and 1957, journeyman certificates needed to be renewed every two years. Since 1958, journeyman certificates have been permanent.

Program Highlights

as of June 30, 2003

- In Saskatchewan, there are 48 designated trades. Four of the trades require compulsory apprenticeship.
- On June 30, 2003, there were 5108 apprentices registered in the system: 4444 male and 664 female apprentices.
- 567 persons of Aboriginal ancestry were registered as apprentices during the year.
- Dedicated funding of $400,000 was received from the province for Aboriginal apprenticeship initiatives.
- 60% of registered Saskatchewan apprentices live outside the major urban centres of Regina and Saskatoon.
- 2811 apprentices accessed technical training during 2002-2003.
- 152 individuals attended upgrading courses; 489 individuals attended updating and special courses addressing technological change and processes.
- The following certificates were issued in Saskatchewan between July 1, 2002 and June 30, 2003:

Journeyman	1043
Proficiency	59
Completion of Apprenticeship	773
Learners	217
Course Completion	489
Apprentice Year Cards	3432
- Industry plays a primary role in the delivery of the apprenticeship program.
 - Employers hire and register apprentices, and provide journeyman supervision to apprentices.
 - Apprentices spend approximately 80% of their training time working on the job, learning the knowledge and skills of the trade from a certified journeyman.
